It had been weeks and weeks of sailing across the ocean and seeing nothing but blue sparkling waves. For days and days, the sun had been shining down on me, I was hot, bothered, and feeling glum. Today was a different day, I woke up with a spring in my step and I just knew today was the day I was going to discover land. The weather had changed, it was misty with a cool breeze and I struggled to see where I was heading but suddenly I noticed a bird overhead squawking loudly. Slowly, the mist started to clear and I couldn't believe my eyes, I could see a shadow, an outline of what looked like....LAND!

My heart was beating so fast, my whole body tingled with excitement, I dived into the sea and splashed my way through the waves to finally step onto land. I could feel the crumbling, golden sand beneath my feet. My eyes took in the wonders of luscious greenery. Tall graceful palm trees welcomed me and I could hear the sounds of lapping waves against the rocks and a variety of mysterious noises coming from deep inside the island. Even through the exhaustion, my body was dragging me off to explore the wonders of MY discovery!
