

Setting Description

High on a towering, craggy cliff perched a tiny, white cottage. This tiny, white cottage with its strong walls battered daily by the effects of the salty sea and whistling wind was home to the Grinlings.

Below the cliff the sea stretched out as far as the eye could see. On bright, sunny days the sea was aqua, blue and shimmering; the sun's rays dancing merrily across the surface but on rainy days it was choppy and grey. It seemed as if all colour had been drained from the world.

Not far out to sea a tall, stripy lighthouse stood on some treacherous rocks. Each night it's comforting light shone brightly to warn ships of the danger.
